

Making fundamental rights a reality means...

having the right to be yourself!

...living a free
and dignified
life...

...being respected
and looked after in your old age...

...not being judged
because of how you look or where you come from,
right from when you
are born...

...being entitled to an education and the opportunity to use it in the world of work...

...being able to keep some aspects of your life private...

...being able to say what's on your mind, with respect for your fellow citizens...

to believe in whatever you believe in...

...having the same opportunities
as others when looking for somewhere to live...

...having
the same
as others when looking for a job...

...having the right to vote and stand as a candidate in European and local elections...

take important
decisions in life
like who to marry...

...having
access to health services...

What is the FRA?

The European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights (FRA) is an advisory body of the European Union. It helps the European Union and the national governments of the EU Member States to protect fundamental rights. The FRA carries out human rights research projects looking at the day-to-day lives of people living across the 27 Member States. It then points out ways in which rights are being protected successfully and identifies areas for improvement.

The FRA was set up in March 2007 and is based in Vienna, Austria.

The FRA aims to help make fundamental rights a reality for everyone in the European Union.

What are fundamental rights?

Fundamental rights, or human rights, express values that receive the highest level of legal protection and guarantee a certain level of freedom and treatment for everyone. The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union is the European Union's commitment to human rights and fundamental freedoms.
